Introduction

Screencast Goals:

• Experience inquiry using primary sources
• Locate resources on national and state platforms
• Connect the use of these resources to standards
• Define how these resources create engagement and support equity
While viewing this image:

- Observe the details that stand out to you
- Reflect on what those observations might mean or imply
- Think about what questions come to mind

Analyzing Primary Sources

Further Investigation for Inquiry

1. Review questions and look for ones that could lead to further research and deeper understanding
2. Turn questions into open-ended, researchable questions that prompt further inquiry

Connections to Standards

Primary resources inspire the inquiry process highlighted in Wisconsin Standards for Information and Technology Literacy, Social Studies, Science, and Environmental Education.

IF, in your social studies classroom, you are encouraging students to:

- search across diverse resources,
- practice inquiry-based research,
- connecting content with the real world,
- assessing the quality of evidence and data,
- be concerned with validity of sources,
- analyze sources for "fake news",
- create authentic artifacts for multiple audiences,
- use crowdsourcing,
- engage in public conversation and debate,

THEN, consider these ITL Standards:

Knowledge Constructor:
Students evaluate, curate, and create digital resources that build knowledge and demonstrate learning.
